Preface

We, the organizing committee, are pleased to invite you all to the “IBD and Liver: East Meets West” Symposium that will take place in Kyoto, Japan.

This symposium will focus on inflammatory bowel diseases (IBD) and hepatitis, including nonalcoholic steatohepatitis (NASH), with additional attention on basic research fields, such as intestinal bacterial flora and regenerative medicine. It is a great pleasure to have the opportunity to hold a Falk symposium in Japan for the first time since its establishment half a century ago in 1967. It is also a great honor for us to serve as the organizers of such an esteemed event.

As the subtitle of Symposium 212 “East meets West” suggests, we have organized the program with the belief that it is important to boost exchanges between Japan and the West, or Europe and the United States, in the fields of gastroenterology and hepatology.

IBD have conventionally been considered prevalent mostly in the West; however, their incidence is markedly rising in Japan and other Asian countries, with the current number of IBD patients exceeding 200,000 in Japan alone. In the field of hepatology, as you know, groundbreaking advancements have been made in the treatment of hepatitis C. It is no less noteworthy that many research projects, as on NASH and autoimmune hepatitis, are underway both in the East and the West.

Our program will therefore highlight IBDs and hepatitis, including NASH, areas where remarkable progress is being made, as well as basic research fields, such as intestinal bacterial flora and regenerative medicine. As world-leading gastroenterologists and hepatologists from Europe and the United States meet with Japanese experts in these fields who are receiving worldwide attention, we intend to have all participants engage in active discussions on the topics with the differences and similarities between the East and the West in mind, thereby promoting their scientific and goodwill exchanges. Furthermore, to get as many young leaders of the next generation involved in this event as possible, we have invited them to a poster session.

It is our sincere hope that all participants in this symposium, which is made possible by full support from the Falk Foundation, will make the most of the occasion as a forum for presenting and examining the latest findings from the East and the West. Through new insights and greater recognition thus obtained, the participants will gain a better understanding of the pathophysiology of these diseases to guide them toward more precise and higher-quality treatment or clinical research.

We look forward to seeing you in Kyoto with our heartfelt hospitality, or omotenashi, in this ancient capital of the East.
